THE CAPITOL WHIRL

A Digest of Things Political Occurring At Harrisburg

By International News Service
HARRISBURG, Nov. 7.—The late Franklin D. Roosevelt, who had been long remembered as the father of Pennsylvania's Teacher Tenure Law enacted in 1921, died today at the age of 63. The 71-year-old legislator, who had been in failing health for several years, died at his home in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from 1921 to 1926 from Philadelphia and elected to the upper chamber in 1938 from Montgomery County. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1942. He entered politics in 1905, was named Receiver of Taxes for Philadelphia in 1907 and Chairman of the Pennsylvania Tax Commission in 1924 to 1927.

Edmonds' term of office would have expired next year and President Pro Tempore M. Harvey Taylor was expected to fix a special election next year to fill the unexpired period. It was believed that the special election would be held May 21, the 1946 primary date. A Senator will be elected for a four-year term at the General Election November 6th. Edmonds never quite recovered from the shock of his son's death from pneumonia suffered in a bombing mission over Germany.

The Department of Property and Supplies has pointed out to State departments and institutions in weekly statements listing federal surplus property that the material sold on an "as is" basis and recommended inspections before purchases were made. The surplus property lists have included sewing machines, jig saws, wood burners, elevators and various types of motors.

The Pennsylvania Federation of Labor (AFL), has reported that payments under the wage and survivors insurance, unemployment security and public assistance programs in Pennsylvania totaled more than $620,000,000 in the fiscal year 1945. The Social Security Law became effective in 1935.

The State Planning Board has reported that Pennsylvania ranks among the States in per capita expenditures and 16th in per capita income collected through taxation. Pennsylvania's per capita tax on the Board said, was less than that of Ohio, New York, Delaware, Connecticut, California, Massachusetts and Michigan. "Not only is this record of present performance promise well for the future tax load in this Commonwealth, but what is still more important, by redeeming nearly $48,000,000 of General State Authority bonds within the past year, the net cost of the commonwealth has been reduced to $52,238,000, an amount equal to only $5.14 per capita," the Board added.

Burgess Expresses Appreciation TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF BRISTOL:

I am greatly honored by the confidence you have shown in me through the handsome majority in yesterday's election. In the coming term I hope it will be my privilege to live up to your expectation in leading your Borough government to the proper solution to the various problems which will be raised by reconversion.

During the more than fifty years that Bristol has been my home, I have seen many developments and improvements in this community. It is my earnest hope that I can follow the same pattern in the future in making a Bigger, Brighter and Better Bristol.

JACOB C. SCHMIDT, Sr., Burgess of Bristol.

Chairman Thanks Republicans TO THE REPUBLICANS OF BRISTOL BOROUGH:

The excellent showing of the Republican Party in Bristol is most gratifying. It is a remarkable turnover from last year, when we trailed by more than 700 votes—the change means a switch in our favor of about 1200 in the final figures.

The response given to the work which your committee undertook has been most heartening. It promises well for the future. Basically, it shows that voters can always be expected to support good government.

I would like to take this means of extending my thanks to the Republican party members as a whole, and especially to the membership of this committee, for the diligent and cooperative efforts which were put forth in producing this victory.

Respectfully submitted,
EDWARD LYNN, Chairman,
Bristol Borough Republican Campaign Committee.

Bucks county soldier votes will be opened and counted at Doylestown starting at 70 a. m., Friday, November 16.

This applies both to the votes received by mail and to those cast at polling places yesterday, and there impounded.

Under the law, all soldier votes had to be marked on or before yesterday's election. They will be counted where it is clear they were cast before the closing of the polls.

American Troops May Withdraw

Chungking—The possibility that American troops may be withdrawn from danger spots in China was seen today as Chinese Communists persisted in their contention that the Yanks are intervening in the spreading "civil war."

Lieut. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, American commander in China, was conferring with his aides following his recent return to the Orient from Washington.

Yamashita Shows Signs of Mental Strain

Manila—Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita showed distinct signs of terrific mental strain today when witnesses at the Jap commander's war crimes trial told more details perpetrated by Jap occupation forces in Manila.

The former Jap Philippine commander took notes today for the first time and often consulted with American officers appointed to defend him.

The defendant looked obviously worried as a nun told how the Japs tore young girls from the sanctuary of St. Augustine's Church to rape them and threw a hand grenade among women and children praying at the altar.

ATROCITY TRIAL STRATEGY

As the trial of Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita proceeds, the wisdom of the American strategy in bringing commanders to trial for war atrocities is revealed. No where in the indictment is Yamashita charged with specifically ordering the torture or slaying of prisoners of war or civilian internees and captives. The charge is that he failed to stop the brutality.

The American prosecutors know that they are making history by holding enemy commanders responsible for what went on within their commands. The question of personal guilt has been set up since World War I, but there is no precedent on which to take constructive action. The precedent is, in fact, against personal responsibility. The defense of such commanders is that government policy is to blame, and government policy can not be tried and found to be guilty or not guilty.

Yamashita will undoubtedly plead that he was not supplied by his government with the facilities to enforce discipline among troops assigned to guard prisoners. He will try to cast the blame on Tokyo. The American generals who are sitting as the court will be impressed by such a plea, for nearly every high-ranking officer has been forced to try to carry out orders which he was unable to execute because of lack of personnel and supplies.

But it is not believed that the court will relent. It is not only bound to uphold the rules of civilized warfare, but it is obligated to set a precedent which will cool the lust of such monsters as Yamashita in future warfare.

TOMB

Discovery and exploration recently of a cave tomb along the road between Jerusalem and Bethlehem inspired reports that the tomb contained extensive inscriptions alluding to the Crucifixion. Now the Department of Antiquities at Jerusalem sends out a word of caution.

The tomb contained eleven burial repositories or urns, five of which were inscribed with names in Greek and Hebrew-Aramaic. Two of the inscribed burial repositories bore the name "Iesous" in Greek characters, followed in one case by the three-letter word "Iou" and in the other case by four letters, spelling "Aloth." Speculation arose as to whether "Iesous" was Jesus.

The Department of Antiquities points out that Iesous is the Greek form of the common Jewish name Joshua. In Hebrew form it is Yeshu or Yeshu, which is similar to Jesus. "Aloth" apparently refers to an aloe tree.

A scientific study is to be made of the entire tomb and its contents. Until the results of this study are published, the Department says, it will be premature to assume any connection between this tomb and any known event or person in sacred history.

The federal payroll is to be reduced, but so far none of the hundreds of thousands employed in Washington has organized a last-woman club.

NATS FLIERS PROVE THAT ARCTIC WEATHER CAN BE WHIPPED

By Marie Williams

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
SEATTLE, Nov. 7.—(INS)—Challenging 500 flights into the Alaskan Aleutian area, the Naval Air Transport Service, Squadron Five, boasts it has proved that trained pilots, sturdy planes and navigational aids can conquer the most treacherous weather the Far North can toss out.

No other squadron in the NATS sends its planes through such a weird conglomeration of weather as that found along VR-5's routes from San Diego, Cal., to Attu, and from Anchorage to Point Barrow at the "top of the world."

For two years veteran crews have met this weather regularly without a serious accident, with cancellations because of weather a rare exception.

In the spring of 1942, when the Japs sneaked into the Aleutians, the Navy's air connections with Alaska were meager and irregular. Commercial carriers had stuck to the inland route, but the Navy had other ideas.

The first flight was in May, 1942, when the NATS sent a Sikorsky seaplane on a non-stop trip from Seattle to Kodiak, flying directly across the Gulf of Alaska. Regular scheduled operations began in June, 1942, up the coast from Seattle, stopping at Annette for fuel and on to Kodiak.

Conditions were primitive and became even worse as the group pushed further out the Aleutian chain into Cold Bay, Dutch Harbor and Adak. Close support was given the campaign which drove the Japs from Attu in May, 1943.

The first NATS Skytrain (in an R44—military version of commercial DC-3's) landed on that desolate island in July, and despite the presence of the enemy on Kiska, began scheduled flights to Attu and Amchitka by August, 1943.

Expansion of the NATS into the heart of Alaska began in 1944 when VR's main detachment was shifted from Kodiak to Anchorage and a shuttle service extended north to Fairbanks. This was cold weather country, offering problems in weather different from the treacherous williwaws and the fog and ice of the Aleutians.

Winds which poured over the snow-covered mountains in Central Alaska were just as fierce, however. Icing conditions added to the peril—but the big transports always came home.

In January, 1945, VR-5 got a chance to stretch her wings into the Far North in support of the Navy's petroleum project on the Arctic slope. The fliers know little about operations in weather that was consistently 30 degrees below zero—but they learned. Three flights a day from Fairbanks into Barrow became routine. By late March, VR-5 was flying into Umiat, lone Seabee camp 175 miles southeast of Barrow and site of the first oil drilling test.

The squadron faced a big test in getting in supplies before the spring thaw which would prevent landings. At least, good thick ice mixed with the gravel provided some sort of a landing strip—but that would go once the big "break-up" began.

In two months, April and May, 1945, more than two million pounds of heavy equipment and food supplies were flown into the Seabees. The four-engine Skymasters brought up weasels, heavy pipes, oil drums and everything else needed, landing night and day.

By late May, when the thaw began in earnest, the NATS had beaten the weatherman to the punch, and had hastened petroleum exploration many months. With or without a landing field, NATS continued to supply Umiat by parachute. Side trips were made to parachute emergency supplies to survey parties.

An emergency landing field, a gravel strip on a sand bar of the Colville river, was constructed by the Seabees and planes began using it in late June.

Ice at Point Barrow finally thawed too, but the Seabees countered by laying a steel matting, which they hope will hold up despite the soggy foundation of mixed gravel and tundra. Upon completion the runway will be 3,000 feet long and with an ample parking apron.

But VR-5 pilots are determined to keep the run hot to the Far North. They say they will make the flights, despite soggy landing strips in summer and rigid winds and clinging ice in winter. They proved that dangerous flying weather in the North can be whipped.

KNOW YOUR STATE

The whole history of Pennsylvania's growth is a record of progress made by its individual communities and its individual citizens.

At no time in the State's history has the necessity for vigorous community action for the improvement of local opportunities been more evident than it is today.

The program being launched by the Governor of the Commonwealth to promote the development of Pennsylvania industry and business can only be made effective if the cities, towns, and rural communities each makes its own part of Pennsylvania more desirable, more attractive, and more useful to its people.

Recent action in two Pennsylvania cities indicates how seriously this problem is being considered in hundreds of our communities both great and small. In the week of January 28, 1946, the City of Harrisburg is devoting its activities to promotion of better civic planning. The interest of school children is being enlisted through essays on "What Do You Think Would Make Harrisburg a Better City to Grow Up In?" Speakers in the Service Clubs will devote their attention to plans for the betterment of the city. Matters of zoning, traffic control, smoke abatement, sewage disposal, houses, schools, parks, playgrounds and noise abatement will be considered at dinner meetings and discussed on radio programs. This activity is organized by a Citizens Committee acting in cooperation with the Harrisburg Regional Planning Committee.

In Philadelphia there is being organized by the Philadelphia Development Committee and the Citizens Council on City Planning an extensive exhibition devoted to the city planning program for Philadelphia. Between $150,000 and $200,000 are being spent on this exhibition and on programs of public information as to the scope and importance of a constructive planning program for the largest city in our State.

Every community, however small, throughout the Commonwealth would benefit by organizing similar activities to awaken public interest in discovering the opportunities which will lie ahead of them if they approach the future with a vigorous determination to improve Pennsylvania's future from the ground up. Pennsylvanians have fought hard and won a great Victory in the fields of war but the true meaning of that victory must finally be developed on the Main Street of every Pennsylvania town through what that town provides for its citizens and what new opportunities it develops for its children.

A Tasty Macaroni Recipe From Middle America

How few foods remain strictly one country's specialty any more! So long as they can be successfully packaged and shipped they're apt as not to turn up in the favorite dishes of some other land almost half way around the globe!

This macaroni recipe for instance comes from Susan Keyes of United Fruit's Middle America test kitchen. The beef is diced instead of ground, which somehow makes the dish seem extra meaty even though only half a pound is used for four to six servings.

Middle America, like most tropical countries, is comparatively short of good beef cattle, and consequently Middle American cookery emphasizes the dishes that utilize less tender cuts of meat.

With our own pre-war over-emphasis on broiled and roast meats, rationing has certainly taught us to appreciate the casserole dishes of other lands—so although we may grumble at the inconvenience of it, there's no doubt at all that these shortages have served to increase our culinary skills!

The United States is the greatest livestock nation in the world, and new methods of breeding will enable us to do some excellent business stocking Middle America with fine pure bred cattle. In return, since we're all inter-dependent these days, Middle America will continue to supply us with even greater and greater quantities of all the tropical crops we cannot possibly grow in our own climate, such as rubber, guanine, essential oils, spices.

The chili seasoning in the following recipe blends deliciously with the tomatoes, olives and cheese, and will make your family demand more and more Middle American dishes.

Middle American Macaroni

3 cups elbow macaroni
1/2 lb. lean beef

1 tablespoon fat
1 clove garlic
1 sliced onion
4 tomatoes, diced
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon chili powder
1/2 cup sliced stuffed olives
1/4 cup grated cheese

Slice the beef half an inch thick and cut into dice. Heat the fat in a heavy saucepan, brown the meat thoroughly, then add the garlic, tomatoes and seasonings. Simmer until the tomatoes form a rich sauce, about half an hour. Cook the macaroni until just tender in boiling salted water. Put a layer of macaroni into a greased casserole, sprinkle with olives and cheese, and cover with meat sauce. Repeat the layer, having meat sauce on top. Bake in a moderately hot oven, 375 degrees F., for 45 minutes. Serves 4 to 6.

COSTLY CHANGE

MEXICO CITY.—(INS)—What's in a name? Around 80,000 pesos (approximately $16,000) when one starts making changes, according to the estimates of the Mexican Federal District government. The names of numerous main streets in Mexico City were changed recently. The cost was for new street signs.

★ ★ HOME IN ONE ROOM ★ ★

By Marion Clyde McCarroll
Even with building restrictions lifted, there's going to be a shortage of living quarters for a long time to come, and many a young couple just setting up house-keeping will have to be content with a home in one room.
That needn't be a dreary prospect, however, by any means. A one-room home can be a cozy, cheerful and comfortable affair if a little careful planning is done and a little imagination used in carrying out the plan.

Shown here in the pictures is such a home, combining bedroom, living room, dining room and kitchenette, in a compact, artistic and delightful manner.

The studio couch—opened up at night to make a full-sized double bed—is set against a built-in wood frame, the lower half of which has storage space for bedding, with a bookshelf just above, and above that, providing an unusual setting for brie-abrac and a large picture.

Cooking and other kitchen facilities are compactly installed in a decorator affect to the ensemble.

WITH ITS BLUE COUCH COVER and matching pillow covers removed, painted yellow, with fourth papered in a yellowish design on a blue background, the studio couch becomes a double bed. Three walls of the room are ground to match couch and pillow covers, making a restful background.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

On her way back to the hall to rejoin Burke, Gail was stopped by Reyna Thayer, who called to her from the head of the stairs. Her black eyes were snapping with fury. "Wait a minute, Gail!" she commanded. "I want to talk to you before you leave." She was halfway down, holding on to the rail, when she caught sight of Dr. McCormick and Stephen, making their farewells.

"You there—" she shouted, in a rasping voice, "Cassius McCormick!"

Slowly Dr. McCormick came over, until he was just below her. His long El Greco face was expressionless, his tone formal. "Yes, Reyna?"

Reyna leaned on the rail. In the soft light descending from the crystal chandelier, her face was distorted with anger. "That outrageous bill you sent me. A thousand dollars—for what?"

"That is my price for a consultation," he answered coolly.

"A consultation!" Reyna screamed. "You'd have killed me if it hadn't been for Gail Benton!"

The crowd in the drawing room caught the echo of her high voice and moved toward the hall, to listen.

"Reyna," Dr. McCormick said, "you are a greater fool now than you were years ago. I have sent you a bill. You will pay it."

Seeing these two middle-aged people who had once loved each other, their faces now blighted by hate, Gail thought wildly: It isn't her illness, it isn't the bill. It's an excuse to dig up the hatchet and slaughter each other!

"I won't pay it!" Reyna shouted. "Your diagnosis wasn't right anyway!"

Then she warned to her subject. "I didn't call you in for consultation—my fool sister-in-law did! I was satisfied with my doctor. I had confidence in her. The proof of her ability is this, Cassius. She ignored your orders, she treated me her own way with my permission. That's why I got well!"

Dr. McCormick turned his chill gaze on Gail. She wanted to cry: Reyna doesn't understand, Doctor—

Reyna looked down at her audience and her voice went higher. She was paying Cassius McCormick back for all her pain and humiliation of thirty years ago, and enjoying it. "Medicine's a pretty good racket, isn't it? But this time—"

Agnes pushed her way through the crowd. The newspaper photographer followed her until Stephen intervened and took the man to the door. But not before Agnes' piercing wail cut the tense air. "Howard, make her stop! Make her stop—she's ruining my party!"

To Gail's relief, Howard showed up. He spoke quietly to Reyna, mounting the stairs, talking soothingly as one would to a cantankerous child. Finally, he persuaded her to return upstairs. The party dissolved in a buzz of conversation that promised ample gossip in Beauchamp tomorrow.

Helping Gail into his car, Burke asked, "What's wrong with the old girl?"

"She's just prejudiced," Gail said. She explained the situation briefly. Burke pulled the rim of his brown felt over his tanned forehead. His blue eyes regarded her quizzically. When they reached her house he asked: "What about the movies this evening?"

"I'm sorry, I've got a dozen chores," she replied.

"Okay, I don't believe in interfering with my girl's professional life," His lips found her soft cheek, her mouth. After a moment he said, "I'm sorry I won't see you tomorrow."

"I'm used to it," she answered wryly.

Burke was never free on Sunday. That was the day he devoted to his mother. Usually he played golf in the morning, came home for a mid-day meal, took his mother to the movies in the evening.

Sunday was a perfect day. The sun made a golden floodlight for the blue sky. The air was warm with Indian summer haze.

Gail padded into the kitchen and had a cup of coffee. "Nine o'clock!" She yawned, stretching her arm. "I haven't slept so late in ages."

"You needed it," Kate said tartly. "As if your own patients ain't enough trouble, you got to become a health officer! You got to treat all that scum in Springdale."

"Katie—" Gail pushed her curly black hair over her ears, retied the belt of her white pajamas, "where's your tolerance?"

"Right where it should be! But I use it only once in a while." Katie lined the picnic hamper with a fresh linen cloth, put in thin bread-and-butter sandwiches, the roasted chicken, the luscious, walnut-studded cake.

Gail went into the pantry to telephone. It took a few moments before she was connected with Reyna Thayer. "How's everything, Reyna?" she asked brightly.

"Terrible," Reyna reported cheerfully. "You know how Agnes loathes any suggestion of a scandal, unless she herself has instigated it. And she's worried for fear Cassius McCormick will cut her dead."

"He won't do that," Gail said soothingly. "You can patch things up."

"Oh I can, can I? Well, I won't. He's going to sue me, Gail. He told Agnes that before he left last night."

"Oh, Reyna, no!"

"Yes!" She chuckled. "And is he going to be sorry!"

"What do you mean?"
"I'm going to let it go to court. I'm going to fight it!"
"You can't do that, Reyna! You'll get yourself into a mess—you'll implicate all of us—"

"You haven't a thing to worry about, Gail. Let Beauchamp know what a smart young doctor you are!"

"Well, I hope it comes out all right," Gail said unhappily. "Meanwhile, come in for that blood count, will you?"

"Good heavens, how many do I need?"

"Just one more. I want to keep an eye on you. You had pretty big doses of the drug."

Gail hung up and returned to her bedroom to dress. Her previous pleasant anticipation was gone. What did it matter if she did have a nice day? The shadow of Reyna's distorted revenge hung over her head.

The cat Belisha was curled on her pillow, purring contentedly. "Scram!" she ordered and let him out into the garden. The phone rang.

But it was not an emergency as she feared. One of Mrs. Spartalini's innumerable grandchildren was calling to announce there were pizza and spaghetti and wine today, and the doctor was invited.

"I'll be there later in the afternoon," Gail promised. But not with the young man who liked pizza, she thought.

Stephen arrived shortly in his father's big car. He came up the walk eagerly.

They were dressed almost identically: gray slacks, and white shirts. He wore a beige cashmere sweater, and she carried a short, scarlet flannel jacket.

"I like your hairdo," he said approvingly. "Sort of a George Washington getup, isn't it?"

"Yes. It was my housekeeper's idea. She tells me I use no ingenuity about myself."

She indicated the hamper of food and a steamer blanket and he carried them down to the car.

"Thanks," Gail said. "Do you you think it'll be warm enough for a swim?"

"I hope so. I brought trunks." "We'd better stop at the drug store," she said. "I want to pick up some suntan lotion. I tint a lobster red every time I go swimming—early or late in the season."

"Well, I'd wager a good many of the tanned beauties would give anything for your white skin." Her smile was grateful. "You're the most consoling person—"

"Suzy Sunshine herself," he laughed.

"I need it today," she said ruefully. "I talked to Reyna Thayer over the phone this morning—and learned what happened later last night."

OPEN 'GOLD CUP' COMPETITION FOR FIVE YEAR PERIOD

American Motor Boating's
Blue Ribbon Prize Always
Big Attraction

REVOLUTIONARY STEP

Any Inboard Powered Boat,
10 To 40 Feet Long, Eligible To Compete

By International News Service
NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—(INS)— Competition for the Gold Cup—American motor boating's blue ribbon prize, in quest of which millions of dollars have been spent—has been thrown wide open for the next five years.

Virtually every type of conventionally propelled racing boat, with the exception of outboards, may compete for the famed trophy when this American speedboat classic is resumed, the Council of the American Power Boat Association ruled at a meeting just concluded here.

This step, one of the most revolutionary in A.P.B.A. history, was made after approving the recommendations made by a special committee to study the problem, under the chairmanship of William M. Horn, former Gold Cup driver.

Any inboard powered boat, not over 40 feet and not under 10 feet in length is eligible to compete, with no restrictions as regards the form of the hull's underbody or the size or type of engine, or engines.

The committee's recommendations made it clear, however, that boats propelled by straight jet propulsion or by air propeller are not eligible, although any form of underwater jet propulsion, used as a secondary motive is permissible.

Adjustable planes and hydrofoils are permitted to allow for greater speed, but, to keep the racing craft a boat, rather than a type of aircraft, no adjustable devices are permitted that would make use of external air forces.

Lifting of the limitations on the Gold Cup class, heretofore confined to expensive craft with motors having a total piston displacement of between 600 and 732 cubic inches, will provide keen and widespread competition.

Most prominent among the new boats competing for the trophy will be the 225 cubic inch hydroplanes, whose owners have long been clam-oring for a chance to capture the blue ribbon prize, that has been raced for since 1904.

In anticipation of renewed interest in the class, the changes in rules provide that the number of Gold Cup boats starting in any one heat be limited to 12.

"GREATEST FORD EVER BUILT"

Says Public from Coast to Coast

"How Soon?" and "How Much?" Ask Throngs in Dealer Showrooms

On October 26 the new Fords for 1946 went on display in dealer showrooms the country over.
In city after city, town after town, dealers reported that the crowds who came to view these fine new automobiles equalled those who greeted the introduction of the famous Ford Model "A" back in 1927—when showroom attendance passed the 10,000,000 mark.

The opening day throngs were matched by those who came Saturday and later. And their opinion has been unanimous. The words most frequently heard have been "The Greatest Ford Ever Built". They backed up their acclaim with orders—326,840 on "V-8 Day", October 26—and Saturday, October 27.

This advertisement is published to record the deep gratification of the entire Ford organization at this splendid public reception . . .
and to answer, as directly as we possibly can,
the two questions most often asked.

"How Soon Can I Get My New Ford?" We sincerely believe the answer is "Sooner than you think!" And here's why—Ford, first with assembly line production of postwar cars, first to stock dealers for a nationwide display, is first in quantity production—1,000 units a day reached last week . . . 2,000 a day in prospect within 30 days.

"How Much Will My New Ford Cost?" We think the answer to this is found in Ford's unvarying policy through more than 40 years of operation: always the highest quality at the lowest possible cost.

TO THOSE WHO HAVE NOT YET SEEN
THE NEW FORDS: All our dealers have them on display. Please make it a point to see if you, too, don't agree that these are the "Greatest Fords Ever Built".
